

I'm not robot

Continue

11 2 great battles game

Auto chess is a newer genre and get steam fast. It saw mass success on PC with games like Dota Auto Chess, Teamfight Tactics, and others. The premise of these games is quite simple. You place the signs on the board each round and these characters fight with the enemy's characters. The characters fight on their own without further input from you. That's why they call it auto chess or auto fighting. If you win, the enemy takes damage and if you lose, you take damage. The different characters work together with synergistic abilities to give you an edge in battle. Each game has its own variant of this core mechanic, but they all work pretty much the same way. This list is young much like the genre itself and we promise to improve it with every update. Here are the best auto chess games and auto games fight for Android!

Chess RushClash RoyaleDota UnderlordsHearthstoneMagic Chess: Bang Bang Arena AllstarsPrice: Free to playArena Allstars is a pretty decent auto battler. Players have access to a bunch of different maps, characters, and different game modes. There are matches with up to seven players along with a co-op mode if you want to play with friends or strangers. It also has a promotion, a practice mode, tournaments and nice little things like emotes. The game seems to tick all the boxes and most players seem happy enough. Most of the complaints either deal with connectivity problems or minor bugs with AI opponents that don't take the damage they should. We assume that all these are temporary issues, though. The game is free to play with any combat pass to unlock premium content. Arena of Evolution: Red TidesPrice: Free to playArena of Evolution: Red Tides is another auto chess game that seems to hit most of the right tones. It has over 50 pieces to collect and use for your team. In addition, players get eight players free-for-all PvP, and pretty standard auto chess mechanics. The game also allows you to send and receive heroes to other players and has global servers for better or for better. A lot of the game's complaints come from internet connectivity issues. But apart from that, the experience is solid around. The developers also intend to add cross-play between PC and mobile in a future update so come back for that if it interests you. Auto Chess by Dragonest GamesPrice: Free to playAuto Chess by Dragonest Games has a lame name, but it's actually a solid game. It was among the first wave of auto chess games on mobile. It includes seven player free-for-all battles, an e-sports league, and, if you do well in the esports league, actual cash prizes. Thankfully, the game is actually quite easy to learn with one of the friendlier UIs we've seen in an auto chess game. We feel that this one is great for beginners to the genre and the difficulty just peels up from there as you face more and more competent opponents. Its biggest flaw is the finicky cloud-saving feature. Be extra if you intend to uninstall/uninstall/install or buy a new phone because many people have lost their save data. Auto Chess LegendsPrice: Free to playAuto Chess Legends is another competent auto battler. The game boasts 15 minute matches (at most), over 50 heroes to play with, a variety of game modes, and lots of special events to keep things fresh. This one felt like one of the simpler auto chess games on mobile and it's another we recommend to new players in the genre. But despite its simplicity, there are shortcomings. You can buy heroes and introduce a potential pay-to-win mechanic, although we didn't notice anything too nasty in our tests. This one has the potential to be big or bad and it seems that the developers haven't really made their choice yet. It's a fun game at the moment. Badland BrawlPrice: Free to playBadland Brawl is probably the easiest auto battler on the list. It uses a 2D, side-scroller map versus the traditional chessboard style setup. Thus, this is an excellent game for beginners to the genre. However, the core premise is the same. You drop characters on the board and they fight with your opponent's characters. The winner is the last standing. It has a bit of a gacha element but it's nothing too serious. Also, you can see other people playing the game if you don't feel like it. We can catch some flak for this choice, but we think it's a great starter auto battler for folks new to the genre. Chess RushPrice: Free to playChess Rush is another decent auto battler with all the common core elements. You place the characters, they synergize, and you beat your opponents if you outsmart them. The game has over 50 characters along with various game modes, including two versus two, four against four, and eight players free for everyone. It also includes a Turbo Mode with matches that lasts for about ten minutes. It hits almost all the right marks and it makes sense. This is a Tencent game, developer of Arena of Valor and PUBG Mobile. Aside from some connectivity issues, most people seem to enjoy the game and it's nice to see bigger mobile game developers in the genre. Clash RoyalePrice: Free to playClash Royale is the mainstream option for an auto battler. Most of the same elements as other games in the genre. You play characters on one board, they attack the other player, and the last player wins. This one is quite a bit different in execution, however, and has many games playing elements from Supercell's other hit game, Clash of Clans. In addition, the game is a one on one duel where most auto chess games have greater free for all modes. We'd understand if you don't consider this to be a pure auto battler experience, but it meets all the qualifications, even if it's a little closer to a deck-building game. Dota UnderlordsPrice: FreeDota Underlords is the most recognizable name in auto chess. The entire genre originates from a Dota 2 mod. The genre took off from there and Dota is the mobile version of mod. It is Standard auto chess game so you should know how it works by now. You get heroes, you put them down, make synergies, and try to beat your opponents. In addition, the game includes an offline mode and a seasonal rotation that removes heroes and items to add new ones and keep things fresh. It is also in the only completely free auto chess game on the list. It's not perfect, but it's solid. HearthstonePrice: Free to playHearthstone is another game that may not fit here exactly, but it's still an auto-battler and it belongs on a list like this. It is one of the most famous tire-building auto-battlers on any platform and most people know how it works. You build a deck of cards, start a duel, fold your cards and fight. The last standing person wins. The game includes a few different game modes, cross-platform play with PC, and it's a pretty mature game. It's not quite the same as most of the others on the list, but it's close enough in most cases. Magic Chess: Bang BangPrice: Free to playMagic Chess: Bang Bang is a return to the typical auto chess experience. There are over 50 heroes to play, eight player PvP, and the usual strategy that comes with an auto-battler. We're at the end of the list so there's not much to say here. It plays as you would expect with a decent UI and relatively simple learning curve. Microtransactions are not as friendly as some others, but we have not encountered many problems with it. It's pretty decent overall. If we missed some great auto chess games or auto games fight for Android, tell us about it in the comments! You can also click here to check out our latest Android app and playlists! The Battle royale game genre has taken off thanks to PlayerUnknown's Battlegrounds (PUBG) and Fortnite Battle Royale, both juggernauts in the PC gaming world (and now available on a growing number of platforms). The excitement, action and strategy required on PC increases to a whole new level inside VR, and there are a few options popping up that deliver the battle-royale experience in your head-mounted screen. Here are the best available now, whether it's Windows Mixed Reality (WMR), Oculus Rift, or HTC Vive. If you already know what PUBG looks like, it's hard not to call this a clone at first glance. It has a similar airdrop, a similar gear mechanic (where you'll find all the junk in the whole world), and an ever-shrinking playing area that forces all 30 players into a tight circle to fight it out until only one person remains. It has its fair share of bugs and has yet to move out of Steam's Early Access program, but Stand Out: VR Battle Royale (about $25) is one of the best ways to experience multiplayer gun battles in WMR, Rift and Vive. Look at Steam Bullets and More VR What was already an established first-person shooter (FPS) with great VR mechanics, bullets and more VR (about $15) has had battle royale to their game modes in the wake of the genre's increasing popularity. You and 11 other players fall on a one and fight it out to be the last living ... which is the tradition. If you want an FPS with a lot more options than just battle royale game mode – and with arguably better weapon mechanics – give this a try. It is available for WMR, Rift, and Vive. Look at Steam For the Future: Pavlov VR Standard Pavlov VR (about $10) game can best be likened to Counter-Strike, offers up some quick search and destroy action on HTC Vive (and thanks to SteamVR integration, WMR). It has a good range of weapons, a friendly community, and that is to receive updates that should eventually move it out of Steam's Early Access program. The developer, in a Steam blog post, mentioned that official Oculus support and a battle royale mode are on the way, and should arrive sometime in 2018. It's really worth playing now for all fans of the FPS genre, and as long as updates continue, we will hopefully be able to be aired into an arena in the near future. See steam more resources Which battle royale games are you enjoying in VR? Let us know in the comments! Also, be sure to check out these other links for battle royale fun. We can earn a commission for purchases using our links. Learn more. More.